AMUSEMENT NOTES.

The play to be given by the Bennett-Moulton company at its opening performance to-night at the opera house is entitled, "A Daughter of the People."

It is a story of European life. The plot lays around a young girl, whose father, a Russian exile and gambler, has borrowed a large sum of money with which to gamble, and has given a mortgage note for the amount, pledging his daughter's security for payment, which is permissible in Russia under an old law. The old man, ruined, commits suicide, and the creditors, Jean Rioux and Norman Ware, get into the story here.

The mistress of the girl, Raisa, enlists Ware's sympathies. He buys the note and takes the girl under his protection. On the way to England, where he intends placing her under his mother's care, the girl is abducted by Jean Rioux and Heloise Clement and taken to Russia. Incidentally, it develops that Raisa is an heiress to a large estate, which Rioux means to get through a forced marriage with her. She is rescued by Ware and his chum, Robert Emmerson, after a series of rather exciting adventures and situations. Ladies' tickets to-night.

An Italian named Christofolini, 32 years, was drowned Saturday at Readsboro, the accident taking place in the presence of a friend, who was swimming with the unfortunate man. He did not realize that the drowning man was in danger until too late.

TRUE STANDARDS OF LIFE.

The Measure of a Man is What He Is, Not What He Has.

It takes so long to learn how to live, so long to get even a glimmering of what life is for and what we ought to do with ours. We are so prone to live in the future, to fret ourselves about it. We are so busy yearning for the joys we imagine other people have and worrying about the trouble we imagine we are having that we make of the present, the one thing we are sure of, an endless regret.

And of all the follies the limit is to permit some one else to make our standards for us. Haven't we intelligence? Can't we think for ourselves? To want things we don't need, many we do not really care for, just because some one else has them and wouldn't understand if we didn't have them! To struggle and strain to make a show when all the neighbors know it is only a show and would respect us a heap more if we had the courage to be ourselves! Death's standards ought to be life's standards. Death does not ask how big a house we hail from, nor how many university degrees we have won, nor what is our bank account. Not what we have nor what we know, but what we are. And that's our measure of everybody but ourselves.—Erman J. Ridgway in Delicatore.

Mar Kind Friend.

Maud—So he had the cheek to ask my age, did he? Well, what did you tell him? Ethel—I told him I didn't know positively, but I thought you were just twenty-four on your thirtieth birthday.—Club-Fellow.

Conditional.

"If I ask your father's consent will you marry me?"

"Well, it depends on how your face looks when you get through asking him."—Cleveland Leader.

AN ANGRY MUSICIAN.

Amusing and Pathetic Story of Constant's Picture, "Too Late!"

An amusing and pathetic story is told of Benjamin Constant's first picture to attract attention. It was called "Too Late" and represented Fortune and Glory visiting an artist just as he had breathed his last. The artist was lying on the bed. The figure of Death stood near the door through which Fortune, carrying a box of money, and Glory, bearing laurels, had just entered.

The artist received many letters from those who had seen the painting. One was written by a professor of music, an old man, who expressed in touching words the emotion he had felt at the sight of the artist's work. He asked Constant to visit and talk to him about "Too Late."

The invitation was accepted, but as soon as the old professor saw the artist he uttered an ejaculation of surprise and anger. "Why, you are quite a youth!" he exclaimed. "I thought you were old and like myself, had spent your life in vain endeavor to obtain recognition of your abilities. I conceived that picture to be the last despairing cry of a man as unfortunate as I am. I find you are quite young and your eyes are full of hope. You are a humbug, sir, and I request that you leave this house immediately!"
